This is an invaluable book for students of culture, society and politics in Higher and Further education and at A-level, and for everyone whose professional work is affected by issues of pluralism and the place of religion in society. It will also interest the general reader. About the Author. Tariq Modood is the Director of the University of Bristol Centre for the Study of Ethnicity and Citizenship and a regular contributor to media and policy debates. Robin Richardson was the drafting editor of Islamophobia - a challenge for us all, published by the Runnymede Trust in 1997. He has since auth My publications include Multicultural Politics: Racism, Ethnicity and Muslims in Britain (2005), Multiculturalism: A Civic Idea, (2007/2013) and Still Not Easy Being British: Struggles for a Multicultural Citizenship (2010); and as co-editor, Multiculturalism, Muslims and Citizenship: A European Approach (2006), Secularism, Religion and Multicultural Citizenship (2009), Global Migration, Ethnicity and Britishness (2011).Â With most focused on are the political theory and sociology of multiculturalism, interculturalism and secularism. Former Bristol Director of the Leverhulme Programme on Migration and Citizenship, with UCL, which consisted of 8 projects running between 2003-09. Recent publications include Multicultural politics: racism, ethnicity Minda de Gunzburg (Harvard) fellowship he explored the extent to which Europe and Muslims in Britain (Edinburgh University Press 2005), Multiculturalism: a has witnessed an observable â€œretreatâ€ from approaches of multiculturalism across a civic idea (Polity 2nd edition 2013) and Still not easy being British: struggles for a variety of national citizenship regimes. (and specifically what a retreat of multicultural citizenship (Trentham Books 2010); and as co-editor, Multiculturalism, turalism in Europe actually resem This is clearly the best book ever written on national identity. The authors have worked together for a quarter of a century, and have become very sophisticated analysts, imaginatively using varied methodological tools with exemplary subtlety. The research goes deep, well beyond the daily headlines, and we meet real human beings and come to understand their concerns.Â John A. Hall - James McGill Professor of Comparative Historical Sociology, McGill University, Montréal. National identity as opposed to the ideologically driven politics of nationalism or an apolitical patriotism is o...Â Still Not Easy Being British: Struggles for a Multicultural Citizenship. Stoke-on-Trent: Trentham Books. Moore, Margaret 2006. Multiculturalism is yet another response, based not just on the equal dignity of individuals but also on the political accommodation of group identities as a means of challenging exclusionary practices and fostering respect and inclusion for demeaned groups. A further level of multiculturalism is to move beyond a focus on exclusion and minorities. This is about more than positive minority identities, it is about a positive vision of society that includes previously excluded or marginalised groups on the basis of equality and belonging.Â His new book Still Not Easy Being British: struggles for a multicultural citizenship is published by Trentham Books, price Â£19.99.