A critical book review is not a book report or a summary. It is a reaction paper in which strengths and weaknesses of the material are analyzed. It should include a statement of what the author has tried to do, evaluates how well (in the opinion of the reviewer) the author has succeeded, and presents evidence to support this evaluation. You should also review other sources of information about the topics covered in the book, check facts, statistics and other statements made that seem unusual or of interest to you. You need to develop some overall understanding of the topic to best describe the As a result, text analysis, and therefore textbook analysis, entails close scrutiny of the linguistic, visual or more broadly semiotic choices that have been made to present a particular selection of reality as legitimate. Critical curriculum theory has provided a broad frame to conceptualize the role of textbooks within education, while critical discourse studies has offered researchers a theory and methodology of analyzing language, text and meaning that is congruent with that framing. Most textbook studies touch on culture, whether explicitly or implicitly, since analyses of meaning necessarily entail an examination of the broader value systems within which these meanings are embedded. There is a strand of research however that has made culture the explicit focus of textbook analysis.
